

SONJA MCGILL'S SEXUAL HARASSMENT CASE IS FEATURED ON THE DALLAS MORNING NEWS

October 15, 2018

Partner Sonja J. McGill's representation of a yoga instructor who alleges she was sexually harassed while taking part in a session is the subject of the Dallas Morning News article titled, "Dallas woman says she was forced out of faith-based Holy Yoga for reporting sexual harassment during class."

McGill's client Danette Galvis was a yoga instructor for Dallas-based Holy Yoga when, in October of 2017 at a retreat and in front of several hundred students, she alleges a fellow instructor sexually harassed her. Galvis reported the incident within two hours to supervisors and, as her suit for sex discrimination, retaliation and defamation filed on August 9 details, she subsequently was given a pay cut and demoted, before resigning and facing social media-spread defamation.

The case is Danette Galvis v. Holy Yoga Foundation and Holy Yoga Global, LLC (3:18-cv-02081-M) and is seated in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Dallas Division.

To read the Dallas Morning News article, please click here.

Related Practices

Immigration

Labor and Employment

Litigation